Hello Joe - I hope this finds you well.

Sorry I haven't updated you in awhile, my son was born two weeks ago- so things have been a bit hectic. Jiu jitsu will start as soon as possible- so I'll let you know when to keep him on your radar!

Pat is making great progress on both his weight and his cardio. He has dropped from close to 240 to 225 now. His weight loss has primarily been from increased cardio workouts (as opposed to dieting). It seems all of his weight loss so far has been fat weight- so he has retained his power. We agree with you that middleweight is the ideal weight-class for him. He will be strong there, and shouldn't be undersized height or reach-wise. With his increased focus on cardio workouts he should also be able to provide the UFC and fans with a high-output for all 15 minutes and very exciting fights.

We are continuing to prepare for your next offer at middleweight, and will be ready. We remain open to a light heavyweight match-up if someone falls out and you have a spot to fill though.

Best Regards,

Kevin

He won't be fighting on that card.
 I have to fill the cards with fighters who are willing to fight the opponents offered them.
 He had a fight available but refused it so he will fight later.
 Probably around February.

Hello Mr. Silva:

I'm Kevin Lillis and am managing Pat Walsh. I am the CEO of Victory Combat Sports as well, a regional promotion in the northeast (which I hope will become a steady feeder to, but is not and will never be a competitor to the UFC). I only mention Victory as I have been match-making MMA and Muay Thai fights for over five years. My hope is that you will find me straight-forward and easy to deal with as a result of my experience matching up fights and trying to keep them as balanced as I can.

We didn't get to speak after your offer of a match-up with Daniel Kelly- but wanted to make sure you knew we really appreciated that. Daniel Kelly would have been a great match-up for Pat. As I believe Pat told you, he has been really focusing on his strength and conditioning program, is walking around at around 235 lbs with less body fat than he had when he was on the show. We would never want to risk not making weight (especially this early in Pat's UFC career) so were unable to take a middleweight fight so soon. To be clear- we would love this fight in the future, or with another suitable MW match-up- but would like to give Pat enough time to get down there. A middleweight match-up in particular that we would really like is Eddie Gordon. In addition, I believe that's one with a lot of angles that can be built on (Eddie giving Pat such a hard time about training with BJ's team on TUF, Eddie being from NY while Pat is from Boston, etc...)

For Cummins- we unfortunately feel this is the worst "proto-type" for Pat (Walsh)'s career right now. Similar to the fight with Cory- it hit a wrestling stalemate. Pat has a well-developed submission game, and is great in transition but he was unable to showcase those at all. Pat has been working extensively on his striking, but for now I don't want him taking a fight where the only aspect of his game a casual fan will really be able to see if his still-developing striking. As mentioned above- Pat has a great submission game, he's extremely strong, has great wrestling- but if his wrestling is neutralized (and therefore he can't really get it to the canvas to work his submission game)- fans won't really be able to see that. This is a fight I think we'd definitely be comfortable with in the future as Pat's striking game is improving by leaps and bounds, but for now I am going to have to pass on the opportunity. Similar to the situation with Eddie- we specifically think someone like Matt Van Buren would be a great match-up and one that already has a lot of the build up from the show- but we'd be very open to fighting most of the guys at LHW so long as the next few fights aren't against other elite level wrestlers (that we think would make for an ugly match-up) like Cummins and Cory Anderson. Please let me know if you have any questions or comments. I am always available at this e-mail address or you can call me (or text me)at [REDACTED]

Best Regards,
Kevin
